Messrs. EDITORS,

The following lines were written to a valuable friend, on the decease of a darling daughter. It may not be amiss to mention, that the character of ANNA, is one of the best of her sex. In exercising sympathy and benevolence, these finer feelings of the soul, perhaps she has but few equals, to which allusion is made. If, Gentlemen, you deem the composition worthy a place in your paper, it is at your service.

MIRA.

NAY, mourn not ANNA, as the world doth mourn.

Thou' death terrific, awful foe to man
Hath hover'd o'er your hospitable roof;
Nay, the threshold pass'd, and bore thy darling

EMILY hence: a glorious privilege!
To thee is giv'n, by faith's firm eye to trace

Her immortal mind to mansions pure
Of bliss; those fields of light above, where
Thou, thrice happy thou, when a few circling

Months are past, or transient years at most,
By blest assurance giv'n, look'st to arrive,
With thy lov'd bosom friend; thy partner now

In grief; thy stay, thy solace here, in bliss
Unutterable bliss, to live with him;
Who purchas'd both at goodly price, and paid

The ransom down! prompt payment. And Oh that

Hope, too oft a flatt'rer here, may keep her

Lamp well trim'd; nor let it wax more dull

By ought that may impede thy progress thro'

Our darkling vale of woe; but o'er thy eve

Of life, scarce yet the noon, a ten fold lustre

Shed and light thee hence; when death's cold hand shall

Seal thy eyelids down; congeal life's purple

Stream; nay, even freeze thy heart to coldest

Apathy. Ah! wondrous change indeed,
When it will feel no more! no ANNA no!
Thou' even misery's voice should call. Nor Wonder that thy treasured secret's known,
For infant lips will hiss, what infant ears
Receive; and rest assur'd thy deeds are wrote

On orphan hearts, that ne'er, no, never no—

Will th' impression loose, till mem'ry's self

Is lost.—Norchidene ANNA, tho' I have Transgress'd, for hearts surcharged can ill
a secret

Keep; nor wilt thou term it flatt'ry, ah no!

None would'f thou willing wrong, and sure not me.

But soft! methinks, I hear thee now exclaim,

EMILY! my EMILY! my darling

EMILY art thou indeed gone! gone! gone
Forever! a heart's flow'r untimely

Cropt. Never, oh my EMILY! never Shall I more behold thy infant charms,
Or hear the lisping on thy father's knee!

Ah no! that happy period's past, tho'
Late all gayly wrapt in smiles thou ran'st
All tottering to his arms, to welcome,

As it were, his usual return. Ah
Hapless change! He drooping now appears,
Unmet by thee, by thee unheard. Deep,

deep,

He mourns and needs the comfort that he

Would give. But nought alas avails! in death's

Cold chambers dost thou lie; bound down with icy

Chains of adamant, in gloom, in darkness
Wrapt. But yet a hope exists to which my Soul shall cling for sure support, a refuge

'Gainst despair, tho' thou wilt ne'er return, ere

Long my EMILY, we shall go to thee.

There, ANNA rest thy hope; a goodly prop

Indeed. Thrice happy they, who firm in faith,

Nor death, nor grave, nor future fear, in vain

Will mundane griefs assail; the heart may

Pain, but not despair, tho' scalding tears should

Furrow deep the cheek, and dim the eye, when

Blest religion fortifies the soul.

ANTIQUITIES OF EGYPT.

Among the monuments brought from Egypt by the officers of the army of gen. Bonaparte, is a valuable one found at Rosetta, which, say the French journals, "will go near perhaps to change our ideas, to revive our lost hopes, and enable us, at length, to resolve a problem, the solution of which had been judged impossible." This monument bears three inscriptions, the copy of which has been drawn upon the stone itself, by a particular process, invented by the citizens Marceet and Gallard, one the director and the other the corrector of the National Press, established at Cairo. Gen. Dugua sent the copy to the National Institute of France, who referred it to citizen Amelhon, to enter among the first labors on Greek inscriptions. The three inscriptions of the monument, are written, the first, in hieroglyphic or sacred characters; the second in characters of the language of the country, that is to say, such as was then vulgarly spoken in Egypt; and the third, in Greek characters. This last informs us, that they are all one and the same decree, expressed in three languages. From the circumstance of the authors of the decree having ordered it to be engraved on a stone of that kind, which is distinguished for its hardness, being of granite, according to the report of gen. Dugua, it should seem that they wished to secure to this monument an unalterable existence. Notwithstanding this wise precaution, however, time, which devours every thing, has gnawed the stone in many of its parts, so that not one of the inscriptions is entire! That in hieroglyphic characters, which we are the most interested to know, is mutilated in every part, and what remains does not exceed half of the volume which it ought to have.

The inscription in the vulgar language of the country, and which likewise merits the particular attention of learned Orientalists, is the least injured. The Greek inscription has suffered much more than the preceding one. Of forty-four lines which it contains, twenty-four have been more or less corroded. Some have lost more than a quarter of their length, which disfigures the text so as to render it sometimes quite unintelligible.

Although this inscription is defective, enough appears to attest that it is a monument erected in honor of Ptolemy Epiphanes, son of Ptolemy Philopater, and of Arsinoe. Ptolemy Epiphanes was the fifth of fourteen sovereigns, who reigned in Egypt, after the death of Alexander, from Ptolemy, son of Lagos, surnamed Soter, or Saviour, to the famous Cleopatra.—This monument was erected by virtue of a decree issued by the priests, who had assembled from all parts of Egypt, at Memphis, to celebrate the feast of inauguration of the new king, son of Ptolemy Epiphanes. The name of Ptolemy, who is the object of the inscription, is hardly ever repeated without being accompanied by the words, ever living or immortal; beloved son of the God Ptolemy, or Vulcan; God Epiphanes, and most gracious. He is compared in it to Vulcan, to the Great Hermes, and to Orus, son of Isis and of Osiris. His father, his grandfather, and the other Ptolemies, his ancestors, partake with him of the honors of this pompous preamble, after which comes the first part of the decree. The priests here alledge the motives on which it is founded; the motives are, in general the piety of the prince towards the gods, and his beneficence towards men.

The inscription purports, that Ptolemy Epiphanes had made great donations in silver, wheat, and other largesses of every kind, to the temples and to the priests who served them; that he had restored by force of arms, tranquility to Egypt; that he had afterwards sought to repair the evils of war, and to re-establish the domestic comforts of the people, by remitting either in whole, or in part, the taxes that were in arrears, and by diminishing the weight of those which were in force on his accession to the throne. The inscription adds, that he had caused the prisons to be opened to those confined in them, and discharged a great number of accused persons who had been long expecting their sentence; that he had ordered all the duties and rents which constituted the domain of the temples, and all those which, under the reign of Ptolemy Philopater, his father, were collected, either in silver or in kind, every year, on the vines and on the gardens, to the profit of the gods, should continue to be exactly paid, as in the time preceding, and that the priests should pay no more for their personal imposition, than what they had been required to pay, at the commencement of the reign of his father.

The inscription here refers to a particular fact, which is worthy of remark. It informs us, that there were manufacturers of linen cloth, designated under the name of hyffus, and dependant on the temples, and that every year a certain quantity of this merchandize was deducted partly for the service of the marine, and partly for the private service of the prince; and that Ptolemy Epiphanes, in one circumstance, ordered the remission of a part of this right or due, and that in another, he suspended the collection of it. This prince made other decrees in favor of the people and of religious worship, to dwell on which would exceed the limits prescribed in this extract. In the eighth year of the reign of Ptolemy Epiphanes, there was a great inundation of the Nile. This Prince ordered dykes to be constructed to contain the river in its bed, and to prevent it from spreading over the plain country, as it generally did every year.

The inscription speaks also of the siege and capture of Lycopolis (city of Wolves) which this prince took by assault. History comes here in support of the inscription. It informs us that Lycopolis had revolted against Ptolemy Epiphanes, and that after having entered it as a conqueror, he treated the inhabitants with much severity; but if he punished with an extreme rigour the rebels who persisted in their revolt, he generously pardoned those who returned to their duty, and even ordered them to be re-established in their properties. The Ox Apis, and the Ox Muevis, two of the greatest divinities of the ancient religion of the Egyptians, had also a part in his pious liberalities.

Extending his foresight, says the inscription, further than his predecessors, he assigned considerable funds to defray the charge of their funerals and sepulture, and to support the expence of their worship and the maintenance of their temples.—And thus, continues the inscription, the Gods, to recompence him for these beneficent actions, have given him health, strength, victory, and every other advantage which can render a prince happy. The priests then pass to the arret or conclusion of their decree.

This second part of the inscription is unfortunately that which has suffered the most from the injuries of time. There appears on it nevertheless, clearly enough, so as to leave no sort of doubt, that the decree is to this effect.—That the temples which had been constructed before, in honor of Ptolemy Epiphanes, and of four other Ptolemies, his predecessors, should be considerably augmented and embellished; that in each of the temples a statue shall be erected to Ptolemy Epiphanes, which shall be called the statue of Ptolemy, the Defender of Egypt; that before it shall be placed the principal divinity of the temple, presenting him with the attributes or trophies of victory; that the priests shall perform their services before these images, three times a day;—that there shall be likewise placed in the sanctuary of the temple a small statue of the new God, inclosed in a little temple or shrine; that the little temple and the statue shall be carried, like those of the other Gods, in those great solemnities where it was usual to convey them from the tabernacle, and march them pompously in public, from which these solemnities obtained the name of the Exodus, or Departure from the Temples.

In spite of the ruins of this part of the inscription, and the disorganization of the text, it is pretty evident that it refers to certain details relative to the worship of the new divinity; and also particularly to a grand festival which was to commence at the neomenia, or new moon of the month of Thouth, and to last five days, during which the priests were to carry crowns on their heads.

As to the date of this curious monument we may fix it, without fearing to be much mistaken, at the year 168 before the christian era. In effect, Ptolemy Epiphanes dying, according to the best chronologists, in the year 177 before the vulgar era; it follows that the inauguration of his son, which took place nine years after, must be referred to the year 168. But the inscription and inauguration of Ptolemy Philometer, son of Ptolemy Epiphanes, are of the same epoch, as the inscription attests.

This is the result of the first labour on the Greek inscription of Ptolemy Epiphanes, in which the learned interpreters did not push their scruples so far as not to finish a word commenced, or not to terminate a clause, the sense of which could not be obscure, as the words preserved necessarily recall those which have disappeared; the second and third, it seems, present greater difficulties to overcome, and will require great efforts to arrive at the end proposed.

From THOMAS'S MASSACHUSETTS SPY.

"Fair, fluttering, fickle, but, thing,
To pleasure ever on the wing;
Gaily coquetting for an hour,
To die and ne'er be thought of more."

FOR the present entertainment of my readers, I shall only lay before them a letter, which I lately received from a correspondent.

TO LEANDER,

SIR,

HAVING heard much of your fame, and the merit of your moral essays, I am induced to solicit your attention to my situation, which I assure is the most tormenting of the kind, ever heard of since the days of Noah. I am a young man of some experience among the fair sex, which, I have the mortification to say, has been gained to my utter sorrow, and at the expence of my reputation. It has been my whole study to improve in the art of galantry, at the entire neglect of my intellects; so that my mind is as destitute of solid improvement, as the modern coquettes are of true honesty. And although I once had the satisfaction of believing, that they thought me a pretty honest fellow, yet I was so much their humble servant, that I dared not to speak, or even think without their consent. I assure you, sir, I have been so jilted about, for these three years past, that I have not found rest for the sole of my foot, or my immortal soul for it has been kept in continual agitation. To enumerate the scenes I have passed through, would be impossible for me, were I to live to the age of Methuselah. I have undergone bonds and imprisonments, tortures, afflictions and fiery trials, which were to try me, as tho' some strange thing had happened to me; which, for a man of my stature, (who am about six feet and three inches) is certainly humiliating to the lowest degree.

Poor Ned says of all tame beasts, he hates a flut—but of all tame beasts, I hate a coquette. I once thought myself tolerably happy in the caresses of these little-jilters. In their addresses to me, they would salute me by the tender epithets of my dear, my sweet, and my honey, which excited a desire in me to salute them in quite a different manner. Then again the scene is changed and the soothing voice of love is converted into the harsh sounds of chiding and railing. As I chanced to be walking in Grubstreet the other day, I was surprised to meet Miss Buxom, a lady of my former acquaintance; and as I had contracted a very great intimacy, I advanced to her with more assurance than I am wont to use on such occasions, and without much ceremony took her by the hand: But think of my dismay, when instead of gentle usage, as I formerly experienced from her, she wrested her hand from me in a violent manner, and assumed an air of sovereign contempt. I stood thunder-struck for some moments—but after my panic had abated, I withdrew from this scene, reflecting on the inconsistency prevailing in the conduct of this species of women. So you see what a dilemma I am in; at one time caressed and soothed like a lap dog, and at another, banged and bruised as though I was a clumsy mastiff; at one time exalted to the summit of female felicity, and at another plunged down into the regions of black despair.

Some time last winter, I had the misfortune to attend a certain young lady to an assembly—during the whole time we were there, she treated me with the utmost neglect and inattention. As I was making an attempt to seat myself at her side, she darted from me like lightning, went and sat down in a dark corner of the room, by an amorous young fop, who has pretended for some time to make love to her; as a specimen of his passion for her give me leave to favor you with a copy of a letter I found the other day, which she had accidentally dropped, in a morning walk, which is as follows:

Life of my Life,

Be not surprised at the presumption of one driven to despair.—he who now addresses you has used every means and exertion to stifle, or eradicate a flame from his breast, which is as pure as moon light, and more corrosive than aqua fortis. In vain have I called philosophy to my aid—nothing but the divulging my sentiments to you, who are the cause of them, will ever suffer me to forget the passion, which now convulses my breast, preys on my vitals and sets my very liver in a blaze.

You may accuse me of rashness and impetuosity to you, but alas! I should be guilty of a greater rashness and inattention to my own happiness, by suffering myself to pine away, and not let my only physician know my case; and that it is in her power immediately to restore me to health and even to consummate felicity. I implore you not to suffer yourself to be offended at me, if you cannot sympathize with me; for so far from giving offence to you, I would rather sacrifice my life, and become a martyr to love, than be guilty of so heinous a crime, as would make humanity weep!

From one who adores you, and ever will although you should prove unkind, till death's cold hand shall crumble his body into its native dust.

W. BONNYFACE.

Now she has completely captivated him, which affords her the wished for opportunity of insulting his passion, and rendering him an object of ridicule. Like Satan, she sets before him all her charms, and the glory of them, and says, "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me."

To return from my digression, I sat motionless during the rest of the evening, till the assembly broke. But Madam, as soon as she was at leisure, immediately eloped out of the room with her new Gallant, without giving me an opportunity of thanking her for her civilities, or of offering my service to wait on her home. If you will do me the favor of advertising her in your next, you will confer an obligation on your much injured friend and humble servant,

T. PUDICUS.

We lament the situation of our friend Pudicus. Not to advance beyond the limits of our present paper, we dismiss the subject for some future speculation.

INSTALLATION OF A KING.
Official account of the taking possession of the Sovereignty of Tuscany, executed in the name of his majesty the King of Etruria, Lewis I. by count Cesar Ventura, Marquis de Gallinetti, &c. Minister Plenipotentiary of his Etruscan Majesty, Florence, August the 4th.

At seven o'clock in the morning the great bell of the old palace announced the solemn act that was about to take place.

At nine a detachment of grenadiers, with drums beating, appeared in the Grand Saloon of the old Palace, destined for the scene of the august ceremony, and they were immediately placed at their respective posts.

His excellency general Murat arrived at eleven with his staff, and was received by the Marquises Ferreni and Gerini who accompanied him to the Saloon of the two hundred, where an alcove had been prepared for him and his staff, until the moment of celebrating the act.

The count de Ventura arrived soon after with the whole of his suit at the gate of the old palace, and was received by four senators, who accompanied him to the great Saloon.

The plenipotentiary and the commander in chief entered the Saloon at the same moment, by different doors, and were received with the customary honors by the militia. They reached the throne exactly at the same time, and neither of them, as it had been agreed, took the precedence.

In the mean time, the senate, the civil magistracy, and other magistrates, occupied the situations assigned them. The minister plenipotentiary and the general also took their seats.

A profound silence was observed in the saloon where no less than 2,500 persons belonging to the different orders of the state were assembled. The first minister opened the ceremony, and the notary of the state delivered a long speech, in which, after praising the wisdom of the French republic, and the genius and talents of general Buonaparte he observed, that in consequence of agreement between them and his Imperial majesty, peace had been signed at Luneville. Having read the whole of the fifth article of the treaty, the minister plenipotentiary also read the proclamation of Lewis the first, announcing himself to the Tuscans as the new king of Etruria and constituting him, the count de Ventura, his majesty's plenipotentiary, to receive the customary oath of fidelity and obedience.

The advocate general next invited the senate and magistrates to take the oath, and this invitation was accepted by the lieutenant of the Senate.

The senators and priors of the civil community then proceeded to the foot of the throne; where having saluted the portrait of his majesty, the minister plenipotentiary and the commander in chief, they took the oath, laying their right hands on the holy evangelists, which were kept open by the deputy of the equestrian order of St. Henry.

All persons having resumed their seats, the notary of the state read with a loud voice the solemn instrument of taking the oath, named the seven persons who had signed their names as witnesses, and pronounced the benediction of Heaven for the new king, Lewis the first. This ceremony was greeted with universal acclamation.

Thus terminated this august ceremony, during which every time when the French republic or the royal personages were mentioned, the minister plenipotentiary, the commander in chief and the senate, uncovered themselves.

Alexandria Advertiser.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8.

Extract of a letter from capt. Henry Fanning, dated Island of St. Mary's Coast of Chili, April 28, 1801, to his parents in Stonington Port.

"An opportunity now offering, I hasten to inform you that we arrived here about the 8th inst. from South Georgia, in good health, and shall leave this island in eight or ten hours for Valparaisa, on the coast of Chili, where we shall purchase what fresh provisions we stand in need of, and proceed immediately for Canton, where I expect we shall arrive the first of August, and it is probable that we shall reach North America about the latter part of January next, if we meet with no misfortune."

[* A town of South America, in Chili, with a well frequented harbour, defended by a strong fort. It is seated in a valley on the coast of the S. Sea, and at the foot of a high mountain, Long. 72, 14, W. lat. 34, 19, S.]

Extract of a letter from capt. George Howe to his brother in Stonington Port, dated Valparaisa, Jan. 1801.

"We arrived at Staten Island, Jan. 29, 1800, caught all the seals that were there and repaired our vessel—sailed from thence October 3d and got around the Cape the 10th, and arrived at Massafuro the 31st, where we loaded 22 men with their provisions—sailed from thence the 1st of December, for the Island of St. Mary's, where we arrived the 16th. From thence we sailed the day after for this port, being in want of some refreshments which are to be procured here in great plenty, and very cheap. We shall soon sail from this port for St. Ambroza and Massafuro where we shall land a few more men.—There is no sealing at present, nor will there be any until the 1st of June, on account of the growth of the pups. Our men are all well."

A letter has also been received from Mr. Benjamin Morrell, in the employment of capt. Howe, dated Island of St. Mary's, April 20, 1801. After detailing the particulars of their voyage until their arrival at Valparaisa, he states, that the ship Miantinomy, capt. Swain, belonging to Norwich, had arrived at that island, who lost two men on his passage, the remainder of his hands were well; that their prospects were good of procuring 50,000 skins during the season; and that they expected to leave men on the island of Massafuro, the next season, and proceed with the ship and schooner to the North-West Coast after Sea-Otter Skins.

PITY.

AS blossoms and flowers are strewn upon the earth by the hand of Spring—as the kindness of Summer produceth in perfection the bounties of harvest; so the smiles of pity shed blessings on the children of misfortune.

He that piereth another, recommendeth himself; but he who is without compassion, deserveth it not.

The butcher relenteth not at the bleeding of the Lamb; neither is the heart of the cruel moved with distress.

Shut not thine ear therefore against the cries of the poor; neither harden thine heart against the calamities of the innocent.

When the fatherless call upon thee, when the widow's heart is sunk and she implore thy assistance with tears of sorrow; O pity her affliction, and extend thine hand to those that have none to help them.

When thou seest the naked wanderer of the street, shivering with cold, and destitute of habitation, let bounty open thine heart, let the wings of charity shelter him from death, that thine own soul may live.

Whilst the poor man groaneth on the bed of sickness, whilst the unfortunate languish in the horrors of the dungeon, or the hoary head of age lifts up a feeble eye to thee for pity; O! how canst thou riot in superfluous enjoyments, regardless of their wants, unfeeling of their woes?

APOSTROPHE TO IDLENESS.

Idleness, thou bane of every estimable quality, thou pander to every vice! in what colours of infamy oughtest thou to be painted, and how dangerous is it to indulge thy caresses! Beneath thy enervating blandishments every corruption springs up and every virtue is obscured. It is thou that sinkest the love of honorable performance in the bed of inglorious ease. It is thou that holdest out the obnoxious draught of what duty calls to perform; and when once thy cup is tainted to intoxication, farewell every hope of fame, farewell every wish for distinction. Bound in thy fetters, talents, whether natural or acquired, are useless; and even the brightest virtues become tainted by folly, or contaminated by perverse passions.

"To shame a liar, tell a bigger lie."

IN observance of this philosophic advice, the following story was told with a grave face. "One Peter Wilkins, a biscuit-maker by trade, undertook to jump off the Monument. He was to mount on the rails, St. Paul's clock to strike twelve, and he was to jump off at the last stroke. Every precaution was, of course taken to prevent the poor devil from breaking his neck; feather bed, loads of straw and wool packs piled one upon the other, to an immense height. The day came; the streets seemed to be paved with faces—the houses roofed with people. The usual accidents happened—broken limbs, dislocations, fractures and contusions; women with children in their arms were thrown down and trod upon, &c. &c. The moment arrived; the clock struck. Honest Peter, true to his engagement, mounted on the balustrades. At the last stroke, off he went!"—"Well, and what was the consequence?"—"Ecod, Sir, when he was half way down, his heart failed him—and he jumped back again."

Valuable Property for Sale.

SEVEN hundred and eighty-eight acres in the county of Hampshire, on the waters of Great Cape Capon, about 20 miles from the Warm Springs, and 30 from Winchester. This land is full of wood, oak and pine timber. Two excellent farms may be made, with 30 to 50 acres of bottom, and rich high lands to each; and in the heart of the timber there is a fine seat for a saw mill. Capt. Daniel Rice will shew the lands.

Three thousand eight hundred and forty-five acres in the county of Ohio, on the waters of Grave and Fish Creeks, near the river Ohio, and about 80 miles below Pittsburg. Some of these lands are very good, with considerable quantities of rich bottom, and plenty of excellent timber. Robert Woods, Esq. the Surveyor of that country, will shew these lands.

One hundred seventy-six and three fourths acres, within three miles of the Warm Springs, upon Great Cape Capon, near its mouth, and within 4 of a mile of the River Potomak. This land has about 70 or 80 acres of rich bottom, mostly in cultivation, with 274 fine Sugar Trees on it; from which I am informed, there may be made 3000lb. of good sugar annually. There are also a seat for grist and saw mills on it, equal to any in that neighborhood, and upon a never failing stream of water. The upland is rich, with plenty of timber, and part under cultivation. This farm is well improved with a good orchard, houses and fencing, and rented last year for produce equal to sixty pounds per ann. Mr. Joseph Butler, at the Warm Springs, will shew it. I will sell all, or any of the above lands for cash or upon credit, or take in exchange for them lands in Fairfax County, or lots of land in the City of Alexandria, or the City of Washington.
